

THE CARDINAL
'07.

JOHN N. TILLMAN, PRESIDENT, B.L.L.

The Cardinal.

Volume Ten.

Published by the Class of '08,
University of Arkansas.

1906-1907.

To Our President,
Judge John M. Tillman,
This Volume of "The Cardinal" is Respectfully Dedicated.

FOREWORD.

In publishing this volume of THE CARDINAL, we have tried to make it such that it will be pleasing to those who have but a few moments to look at its pages. We hope, however, that it will meet with the approval of any who may be disposed to criticize. We realize that we have made some errors; we trust that you will bear with them. We have endeavored to make THE CARDINAL, a souvenir, rather than a book of literary work. We have made some changes which we think will prove to be good changes. If our work meets with your approval, we have by no means failed in our purpose.

We wish to express our sincere thanks to you who have so kindly aided us in the preparation of this book and also to you who have subscribed so freely. We feel very much under obligation to you, for the hearty coöperation on your part has made us able to make this CARDINAL, what it is.

Senior Poem.

Open your minds susceptible,
And give us a serious thought;
We Seniors are neither learned,
Nor will we ever more be taught.

All you who have time should refrain
From the errors many commit,
Of thinking success is contained
In diplomas—mere empty emblems.

Consider, when it 's awarded,
That you must establish the proof
Of valors in it recorded,
Or man will stand scornful aloof.

Blest be the ties that should bind us,
Whose past is unforgotten lore,
Whose future, not yet predicted,
May be poets, prophets never more.

History of Class of 1907.

The Class of 1907, which is the largest in the history of the University, has had a very unique history. We have watched with pride the splendid growth of the University since we entered as Freshmen in 1902. We have seen the student-body grow from 600 to 1,200. We have seen the campus filled with new buildings; and we hope yet to see greater things for our dear old 'Varsity.

The Freshman Class of '02-'03 was one of the largest classes the University has ever had. We had an enrollment of 120, many of whom had been through the mills of Prepdom and were proud to be called "Freshies" and to have the privilege of attending chapel without marching in by sections.

We started out on our year's work with the zeal of old warriors. We attacked Math. I. in a body, but a number of our members formed such a love for the Professors in that department that they lingered behind and some of this number, being of a very loving nature, are still lingering.

It was in our Freshman year that we, assisted by the Sophs and the Preps, about 400 strong, smashed the Junior-Senior fortress, defended by a band of about seventy-five men, captured their flag and triumphantly bore it off the field.

In September, 1904, we gathered for the next year's work. Conflicts with the Classification Committees, exams, and various other things, had cut our number down to sixty-eight, but with this number we went our way, spending our time cramming and looking with contempt upon the measly Freshman.

Our Junior year is one long to be remembered by our Class. It was at the beginning of this year that we had the famous election. The leading politicians on both sides worked long and hard, and, after the third meeting, officers were elected. After the struggle for supremacy was ended the Class sailed proudly on under one flag.

At last the goal that we have been striving for is in sight, and we are called "Seniors." This year has been the best of all. We are bound together by ties of friendship that will never be broken. We receive our diplomas, and go out to fight the real battles of life. We have had many ups and downs, but these have only prepared us for the realities of life.

It makes us sad to think of leaving the dear old 'Varsity that we love so well, and where we have spent the happiest years of our lives; but let us hope that every Senior who leaves her halls this year will ever strive to live up to the principles she has taught.

Class Prophecy.

It was in Berlin that I first began to feel homesick. The wonder of crossing the Ocean, the life and bustle of London, the brilliancy of Paris, and beauty of Italy, were all so new and strange; but somehow Germany made me think of home. Among all the people in the park there was not one whom I knew. I was thinking how much I would give for a sight of Fayetteville, when—

"Why, you dear thing!" cried a voice I thought I knew, and, turning, I recognized my old school-mate, Lyta Davis. After some minutes spent in asking questions, which neither of us took time to answer, we found a seat in a quiet little corner of the park, and Lyta told me how she happened to be in Germany at that time. Three years after her graduation she had been sent to the Fiji Islands, where she remained ten years, and then went home for two years. She was now traveling through Europe before returning to her missionary work. Lyta is devoted to her cause, and is leading a noble life.

I could scarcely wait to hear of the other members of the grand old Class of Naughty-seven, for I had spent most of the time since graduation teaching in a small town in California, and had not heard from my class-mates.

"Well," Lyta began—it reminded me of the tone she used to use when starting to work a math. problem for some of us—"first, Mr. Bollinger and Mr. House have hung out their 'shingles' in Little Rock, and appear to be doing fine. Leora Blair long ago decided to join forces with Mr. Smilie, and they are now keeping a home for orphans in Missouri.

"Our Class has the honor of producing four farmers. Mr. Borders and Mr. Bryant both own wheat-fields in Kansas. Pat Murphy has married, and manages a large farm in Arkansas; Mr. Adam Coker, one up North.

"Miss Umbaugh is not a teacher, as she always said she would be, but the wife of a prosperous lawyer of the Class of 1906. Mr. Parker is a doctor in New York City. I was told that he cured a man that had broken both legs and his neck, but I'm not sure about that. Mr. Hillman is also an M.D. in our capital city.

"Mr. Hyatt, Shirley Wood, and Mr. Hughes are the chemists of the Class. Mr. Hyatt and Mr. Wood have both married, but Mr. Hughes has not yet found a girl who has the requirements necessary to be worthy of him."

"And Mr. Shaver?" I asked.

"A photographer. Would you ever have thought it? His hair is just as red as ever, and everyone likes him, as everyone has always done. He lives in Fayetteville, and says, 'Just a little more—no, not quite so much,' in exact imitation of Mr. Grabill.

"Sallie Evins is teaching in Smith College, Bessie Oliver in a girls' school in Tennessee, and Anna Pugh is Professor of German in the U. of A.

"Mr. Feathers, that Math student (?), after trying six different professions in as many years, finally succeeded in making enough money to buy out a merchandize house in Springdale. He has nothing to do now but watch his employees work. Mr. Walls owns a fine plantation near Lonoke. Mr. Stanley is a real estate agent in Colorado.

"Elizabeth Risser concluded that it would be very pleasant to travel the 'Dusty Rhodes' of life with a suitable companion, and so—you can guess the rest."

"What about Mr. Joe Mahony?" I asked, curiously.

"Senator Mahony, if you please. Mr. A. J. Johnson and Mr. Holt are also politicians. Mr. Ballard, Mr. Spradlin, and, strange to say, Mr. Balch, are teaching school."

"No need to ask of one of our members. In 1915 there appeared a novel written in a beautifully simple, graceful style that charmed everyone who read it. The author is Nell Tidball. Many others have followed that first one, and her fame is secure. But of Rena Shore I had heard nothing."

"Rena traveled in Europe and Palestine for a year," said Lyta, "and soon after was married to an English duke. You must speak of her as Lady Rena."

"Doddridge McCulloch and Mr. Orr had some trouble over their both wanting the same girl, and it happened in the end—as it not infrequently does happen—that both failed. So Mr. Orr is still capturing hearts with that face of his, and incidentally editing a paper in his old home in Kansas. Mr. McCulloch is Professor of English in the U. of A."

"Mr. Sively has never left off writing poetry. It matters not to him whether anyone will publish it."

"Jean Weld has become a home missionary—in her own home. She is the wife of a lawyer of the Class of 1911. Ovid Young is our musician. She studied in St. Louis and New York, but, like Jean, soon concluded that music matters not much, minus a man."

"Both Mr. Pollard and Mr. McConnell are preachers. Mr. Rhyne, Mr. Watson, Mr. Deane, and Mr. Tyson are successful engineers. Mr. Davies and Mr. Carter are both working in Panama. Mr. Buford is President of the Little Rock Telephone Company. Kenneth Reed owns an electric light plant in Springfield, Mo."

"Mr. Roy Coker, being ineligible to the matrimonial market, gained somewhat of a fortune in the wheat market."

"Ruth Crozier is teaching in one of the Eastern colleges. Henrietta Moore became the heiress of a large fortune, and, of course, that changed her plan of being a school-teacher. Sarah Shook is a nurse in Kansas City. You know she always did well in everything she undertook, and she is especially devoted to caring for the sick."

"You remember that Mathetian play Will Braly took part in during Commencement? Well, he liked so well making love to girls and not being taken to account for it that now he is one of the leading actors in a play written by our well-known playwright, Mr. Townsley."

"Mr. Baker, Mr. Dickson, and Mr. Stelzner are still following their profession as electrical engineers. Mr. Combs is County Surveyor of Boone County. J. M. Wilson, the noted scientist, is still climbing upwards. I hear he has recently startled the scientific world by producing unheard-of wonders, which surpass even those of the wizard Burbank. Mr. B. F. Thomas was sent by the Government to the Philippine Islands to teach the Filipino children. Mr. York is Professor of Latin in Cornell University."

"And now I have told you of every one of our class-mates. Aren't you proud to have been one of their number?"

"Yes, I am!" I cried. "Hurrah for the Class of 1907! Do you suppose the old U. of A. has ever turned out another one equal to it?"

In Lighter Vein.

DR. PICKEL: "Miss Manning, here is a transverse section of an onion for you to draw."

MISS MANNING: "Doctor, did you say for me to gnaw this onion?"

DR. BROUGH: "Mr. Parker, please explain the divorce laws of Arkansas, as you understand them."

MR. PARKER: "I don't understand them."

MISS VIRGINIA KNOX: "Gee! I'll bet Mrs. Cicero was swearing before she got this letter read."

DR. REINHARD: "Where is Miss Shannon to-day?"

MISS CAMPBELL: "She has the toothache and has gone to the doctor to get it pulled."

DR. BROUGH: "Miss Beloate, when incorporated organizations violate the laws, what is the penalty?"

MISS BELOATE: "Their charter is taken from them."

PROF. FUTRALL: "Mr. Gatling, tell us about the gender of the word is."

MR. GATLING: "It is masculine."

PROF. FUTRALL: "Well, is that all you know about it?"

MR. GATLING: "It is."

DR. BROUGH: "Mr. Davis, England gets her raw materials from the United States. How does she send them back?"

MR. DAVIS: "Cooked."

PROF. REYNOLDS: "When did Edward I. come to the throne?"

MR. GIBSON: "It was in 1272 in round numbers."

PROF. PICKEL: "No, the tadpoles did not die. I just killed them."

PROF. REYNOLDS: "Do young ladies now call on young men and make proposals to them?"

MR. STARBUCK: "They have not bothered me very much."

MR. COKER (at supper at Dormitory): "Did that preacher say, 'Make us thankful for these blessings'?"

MR. PARSONS: "Yes."

MR. COKER: "It is sure a good thing, for I would certainly have to be forced to be thankful for what we have to-night."

Twenty Years Hence.

One night, as I lay dreaming,
Time's curtain rolled away;
I saw our friends, the Juniors,
As I see them to-day.

Among our friends no truer band
Could we than Juniors find;
Now we had met from every land,
And few were left behind.

'T was long years since the Juniors
Had clasped each others' hands,
And some had been away
To many distant lands.

A few had come from far-off France
And some from sunny Spain;
Others had gone to heathen lands,
And left a worldly gain.

Some, by their inventions,
And some by speeches great,
Or lives of large endeavor,
Had glorified their State.

All these had won renown
By deeds of noble worth;
Than these, by their achievements done,
No greater were on earth.

But many of this noble Class
Still lived on native soil,
Blessing and being blessed
By needed, helpful toil.

These, by their lives of quietness
And sweetness all their own,
Had helped their brothers in the fight,
And a bright crown had won.

Oh, may this dream prove true,
And all their lives be such
As their Creator will approve
For their help-giving touch!

Class Poem.

O Sophomore! O Sophomore!
 Can we ever forget our delight,
 When we know we couldn't be Freshmen again
 To be laughed at day and night.

We tried to put on a dignified look
 To prevent mistakes, you know,
 For even a Sophomore, once in a while,
 Is taken for a classman low.

Seniors noticed us now and then,
 Nor considered themselves too high
 To smile on the noble Sophomores,
 Whene'er they passed us by.

Farewell, bright days of Sophomore;
 We no more thee shall see.
 We have traveled on to Juniorland,
 The land of the glad and free.

But we 'll always have a kindly thought,
 As we go on year by year,
 For the happy days of Sophomore,
 To every heart so dear.

—BLANCHE COTHAM.

In Lighter Vein.

DR. BROUGH: "Mr. Chunn, can you tell us about New Zealand's old-age pension law?"

MR. CHUNN: "Yes, sir."

PROF. REYNOLDS: "Miss Goodwin, what was done with the heretics?"

MISS GOODWIN: "They were burned or punished."

"I solemnly affirm on honor that I have neither given or received aid on this examination."
A FRESHMAN.

"MR. MISER: O honey! why are you running so fast?"

MR. HONEY: "I am scared. The O. D. on the third floor was about to stick me for violatin' Reg. 50."

PROF. REYNOLDS: "No, Louis XVII. enjoyed his beefsteak too well."

MR. HOPSON: "He should have lived at the Dormitory."

At Carnall Hall, on Hallow'een night President Tillman walks up to a supposed foot-ball player and puts his hand on the player's shoulder, and compliments the foot-ball boys for being present.

MRS. CROCKETT (instantaneously): "It is me."

D. R. DAVIS: "No, my girl is coming home from Colorado this summer, and I have got to be there. So I can't canvass during the summer."

PROF. REYNOLDS: "What closed the War of Roses?"

ANSWER: "A marriage."

MR. WOMACK: "A marriage does not often mean peace."

PROF. DUNN: "Miss Ruby, you may take the fifth example."

MISS GIBSON: "Now, Professor, you always give me the hardest one. Please give me the next one."

PROF. DUNN: "Well, you may work the next one."

PROF. WILSON (to prospective students in gas engines): "Gentlemen, this is a subject in which a student was never known to fail."

A. M. Grundy, before recitation in Chemistry 3, wraps a piece of potassium in his handkerchief to take home to try some pranks. When half of the period had expired, Dr. Carroll looks over in Mr. Grundy's direction and sees a miniature representation of the milky-way.

The Verdant Freshman.

The Freshman is the most interesting of college students; he is especially so during the first few days of the term, when that trying time of matriculation and classification must be endured.

A young man, wearing a new ill-fitting suit of clothes, red necktie, celluloid collar, and a big-brimmed hat stuck on the back of his head, perhaps to show his lovely hair, which has been duly brushed, greased, and smoothed down with the greatest care, comes strolling over to the University on the very first day. He goes in and sees such a crowd that he thinks he has hit the one place in the country for him. He soon learns that he must go to Room 2 for matriculation and to Room 16 for classification. Once in Room 16, he is presented to one of the Classification Committee. His conversation is characteristic.

Professor: "Well, what is your name?"

Young Man: "I 'm William Thomas Jefferson Davis—call me Bill at home."

Professor: "What course do you intend to take?"

Young Man: "Oh, I don't know. If I don't take the B.A. or A.B., I'll take one of the Engineering courses."

He is then classified in the B.A. course as a Freshman. Back in his room a little later: "John, what class did you make?"

John: "Oh, I made the sub-Freshman."

Will: "Why, I made the Freshman, and got eighteen hours a week—got sub-Geometry, but I don't care; that's easy." And for three weeks he struts around with all the importance of an old gobbler.

After classification, the next difficulty is getting acquainted—with new Professors, new books, and the other students. In Latin I. he is so scared he can hardly stammer, "I don't know." He thinks at first that History II. is too hard, but later finds it easy. After two or three weeks he has decided what teachers he likes and those he dislikes.

The worst trial of the Freshman is, perhaps, the first-term examinations. He has heard what terrible ones the teachers here can give, and is afraid, even before he begins to cram for them, that he is going to fail. Before he enters the examination-room he is trembling like a leaf. Some do not do themselves justice, because they cannot quiet their emotions; others are sensible (for Freshmen), and pass the examination, taking their own time and ease.

After all examinations are over (not passed, for Freshmen cannot miss the pleasure of saying, "The 'Prof.' flunked me"), comes a new and unheard-of trial.

His name is on the bulletin-board among those who must go before the horrible secret body called "The Doubtful Case Committee." While waiting for his turn he trembles as much as he did on examination; but when he is safely through he has decided that he was not so bad, after all.

Such are some of the trials and difficulties of the modern Freshman—that of matriculation and classification, of getting acquainted with new teachers, new students, and new books, of examinations, and, lastly, of the meeting with "The Doubtful Case Committee."

Never mind these difficulties, Freshmen, but determine three years from now to stand in Senior shoes, tread Senior paths, and enjoy the manifold pleasures and privileges of the Senior.

Freshmen, the west wind wailing by
Calls us as voices from beyond the clouds.
The dreary moving march, the crowd.
Of earth's laborers bids rise nor sigh
When in aim unsuccessful,
Nor weep, regretful;
But in the unequal scale
Throw our youth, our young strength,
And all our God-given heritage of endurance
Against the grinding march of evil;
And then we cannot fail,
Though across our lives, their unchanging length
The years may roll, without assurance
Of wished-for success,
And our power of redress
For wrong, be wanting.
For the leer of evil vaunting
Shall spur us to exertion
Fearless, scorning desertion,
Till we rest, battle-scarred, but victorious.
The strife will be long, but to win—it is glorious.

FACULTY.

T. N. ROBERTSON, Secretary, is a native of Mississippi and a graduate of the University of that State. He came to Little Rock in 1892 and took the LL.B. degree in the University. He is an able teacher and practitioner. He is the senior member of the firm of Robertson, Martineau & De Mers, Little Rock.

COL. GEORGE MURPHY, a native of Tennessee and four years in the Confederate Army, attended the public schools of Tennessee only a short time. He came to Arkansas in '65 and made his private room his law school. But despite this lack of college training, he is Arkansas' greatest criminal lawyer. He was Attorney-General for four years and is now the senior member of Murphy, Coleman & Lewis, Little Rock.

COL. JOHN FLETCHER, of the firm of Ratcliffe & Fletcher, Little Rock was born in Pulaski County in 1849, attended the public schools of Little Rock and spent two years in St. John's College. He was graduated in law from Washington and Lee University in 1870. He is recognized as having no superior as a real estate lawyer in Arkansas.

JUDGE E. W. WINFIELD, A.B., Vanderbilt University, is a son of Rev. A. R. Winfield, pioneer preacher of Arkansas. He took his law course in the University of Arkansas. In 1903 he was elected Circuit Judge of the Sixth Judicial Circuit, and is known as a dispatcher of business.

LEWIS RHOTON, of the firm of Bradshaw, Rhoton & Helm, Little Rock, is a native of Indiana and is a graduate of the University of Illinois. He came to Little Rock in 1890 and was for several years the principal of the high school. He took his law course in the University of Arkansas. He has been Prosecuting Attorney of the Sixth Judicial Circuit since 1904 and has made a great reputation in his prosecution of the legislative boodlers.

JUDGE J. C. HART, born at Dardanelle, took the A.B. degree at the University of Arkansas and graduated in law at Vanderbilt. After practicing law nine years at Dardanelle he was appointed Chancellor of the First Chancery District when he moved to Little Rock. He has filled this high position with credit to himself and the State.

TOM M. MEHAFFY is a native of Georgia. On coming to Arkansas he first located at Benton, but later came to Little Rock and formed a partnership with Colonel Murphy. For several years he was Assistant Attorney for the St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Railroad, and has been recently appointed General Attorney of that road. He is a member of the firm of Mehaffy, Williams & Armistead.

JUDGE JACOB TRIEBER is a native of Germany. He obtained his literary education in Germany and St. Louis. In '69 he went to Helena and studied law in the office of Judge M. L. Stephenson. There he gained such a reputation as a lawyer that President McKinley appointed him Federal Judge of the Eastern District of Arkansas.

T. E. HELM, a native of Arkansas, is a graduate of Hendrix College. For three years he was Superintendent of the Clarendon Schools. In 1900 he was graduated in law from the University of Arkansas, and became a member of the firm of Bradshaw, Rhoton & Helm. He is now a well-known lawyer of Little Rock.

W. B. BROOKS was born in Arkansas. After graduating in Christian Brothers' College, St. Louis, he took his law course in the University of Arkansas. His popular turn easily made him City Attorney of Little Rock last April. He is a member of the firm of Carmichael, Brooks & Powers, Little Rock.

GUS FULK is a popular young lawyer of Little Rock, of the firm of Fulk, Fulk & Fulk. He was born and reared in Little Rock. After finishing the High School course in his home city, he went to George Washington University, Washington, D. C., where he was graduated in law.

R. E. WILEY, formerly of De Witt, is now practicing law in Little Rock. He took his law course in George Washington University, Washington, D. C. He makes a specialty of bankruptcy.

The Medical Student.

The Medical Department wishes to share
In the successes wrought with care ;
For devotion to duty is the fixed rule
In the workings of this progressive school.

Here, in veneration of the parent stock,
The wise students gladly flock ;
Then, with a purpose never shaken,
They consummate the object undertaken.

Here harmony and peace prevail ;
No dissensions ever work avail ;
Devotion to study is the plan for all,
Where all are present at roll-call.

The parent institution we all love,
For the meritorious it will quickly shove
To fond positions, it is plain to see,
In a country where all are free.

With the impulse of genius polish will tell ;
On the rough surface an impress may dwell.
Let none be despondent, all may have hope,
Though some may be limited in extent of scope.

Gratitude should be in the bosom of all
Who feel themselves worthy a professional call,
For, when guarded by the seal of the State,
They have something more than fortune or fate.

JUNIOR CLASS.

Medicum Votum.

While strolling down East Second Street
On March the twenty-third,
Through a crack in the wall of a college court
Here 's what I saw and heard:

Some forty men were gathered there,
Some young, some middle age,
All standing in a circle round,
Each sober as a sage.

As I stood there in silence
This sentence reached my ear:
The President says, "Wozencroft,
Please lead the class in prayer."

"Let 's kneel," says he. Each member dropped,
All anxious to unfold
To a god of war and medicine
The miseries of his soul.

"O Mars! we kneel here at thy feet
To have a word to say,
To ask a blessing from thy hands
On examination day.

"The day is fast approaching, and
We fear we 're unprepared,
Like soldiers on the battle-field,
Each with his bosom bared."

"Amen!" says Dr. Watson;
"Praise to his name," says Lett;
"If the god of war is on our side
We 'll pass these branches yet."

"O Mars, we need this favor now,
For this thing 's looking slim.
If you can't come, call Mercury,
And send it down by him."

"Stop, Wozencroft!" says Colquett,
"May I a question ask?
Is Mars the god you 're calling on
To help us do this task?"

"Pray, how do you expect old Mars
To understand this work,
Who 's spent his life in wars between
The Romans, Greeks, and Turks?"

“O Mars, please don't think hard of me
For what this fellow said;
He 's suffering with a premature
Proloplsis of the head.

“Now, Mars, there 's Brown,
Who 's up against an awful bitter pill;
If you can't help him, seat him by
An able man who will.

“There 's Dooley—has the finest head
I think I ever saw;
Quite too much sense for medicine;
He should have studied law.

“There 's George, O Mars, who 's lucky;
The board he tried and passed,
Notwithstanding he 's by far
The shortest in the class.

“Mars, waste no time on Rizer,
Green, Roberson, nor Ross;
Just hand each one a little 'Jack,'
And they 'll all come across.

“There 's Powell, too, poor worthy boy,
To whom please lend a hand;
He studies hard, but we all know
He 's quite too weak to stand.

“And Watson—Oh, it makes me sore
To have to call his name!
Though put him on your pauper-list;
He, too, is very lame.

“There 's Jewell, Colay, May, and Cates
I guess I 'd better mention;
Though if they pass up anything
It won't be their intention.

“If you see fit to waste your time
Upon these awkward clowns,
Please hold them up; though if you don't,
Go on and let them down.”

Clark raised his head and clapped his hands
And yelled a time or two,
“Hold, boys! I 've got that feeling;
I think I 'm comin' through.

"I want you all to pray for me,
That I may come through at last,
And learn more in the future
Than I have learned in the past."

This interruption stopped the prayer,
And Wozencroft arose,
Drew forth his old bandanna,
Wiped the teardrops from his nose.

"Arise, my boys, stand up like men,
And each his troubles tell;
Don't be ashamed, for 'medicine,'
As well as war, is 'hell.' "

The last to rise was Matthews;
His face expressed relief;
He fingered with his button-holes,
And trembling in his grief,

"Please pray for me," he sobbed and said,
As tears from his eyelids poured;
"The reason why I 'm grieving so
I 've got to pass the board!"

When he sat down, McNeal arose,
With his face looking blue,
And jabbered forth in Irish,
"Faith! I 've got to pass it, too."

This set the crowd to laughing
And broke the dogged spell,
And Watson signaled to the boys
To give their college yell.

And then each member bow'd his head,
Each with compassion rife,
And chanted forth in monotone
The doctor's psalm of life.

"Tell me not in 'Frenches' language
Doctors' life is a pleasant dream;
Though their pleasant looks prove it,
Dr.'s are not what they seem.

"If a doctor's words are truthful,
And graduate is not his goal,
'Green thou art! To school returneth!'
Has been said till it's grown old.

“Do not read for simple pastime,
Never let that be your way;
Always strive that each to-morrow
Finds you wiser than to-day.

“Trust a patron if he ’s honest;
Let the neighbors bury your dead;
Speak and act in the living’s presence,
Being sure to keep your head.

“Boys, remember that your mission
On this earth is but to save,
And be sure that you ’re not sending
Helpless mortals to the grave.

“Never fail to charge a-plenty,
For you know you have to wait;
If your victim leaves a widow,
Charge it up to his estate.

“We must never cease to study,
So that we may leave behind
By our works a good impression
On our fellow-doctors’ mind.

“An impression that another,
Sailing o’er life’s solemn pool,
Old egotistic ignoramus
May take heed and go to school.

“When you ’re in your field of practice,
After ‘examination’s’ strife,
Be not like a stupid donkey,
Be a hero! save a life!

“And may you stand at heaven’s portals,
Be among those on the right;
And your applause, ‘Thou faithful servant,
You have fought a splendid fight.’”

That Ware hasn’t done—long time ago.”
W. S. WOOLFORD.—“So small you would not know he was there if you could not see his face blush.”

Sophomore Yell.

Row! Row! Row! Ra! Ra! Ra!
Wait and see us another day!
Sophomore! Sophomore! Never behind!
We're the Class of Nineteen-and-nine!

Boasts of a Sophomore.

I.

Of all college years
You might explore,
No better will be found
Than the Sophomore.

II.

So much of life
Is yet to come,
And yet none gone
But just the one.

III.

Indeed, it's pleasant
To be far from the goal
And still not a Freshman
To be called "smart fool."

IV.

No fear of diplomas
To burden our minds,
Until in the year
Of nineteen and nine.

V.

No doubt we will pass then,
Not a prof will deny,
For great volumes are done
As each exam goes by.

VI.

'Tis hard to believe,
And yet 'tis true,
This class, no other,
In school can outdo.

VII.

Just forty in number—
Men, thirty-nine and women, one—
But my! what a knowledge
This body has won.

VIII.

We're proud of our lady member;
Indeed, we should be,
For no brighter student
Did this college e'er see.

IX.

Others, we have too,
Who are equally as bright.
In fact the whole class
Is just out of sight.

X.

'Tis reasonable to expect
That aften nineteen and nine
Great feats will be done
In the surgery line.

XI.

For members we have
Who in surgery delight,
And declare they can study it
The "God blessed" night.

XII.

Still others we have
Who in anatomy excel;
And all the school wonders
How those Sophomores do so well.

XIII.

Now this story is true
As ever was told,
For each has a record
You may all behold.

XIV.

So after college days,
And as through life we go,
May God His richest blessings
On this noble forty bestow.

The Lee Literary Society.

The Lee Literary Society, the youngest society in the University, was organized in November, 1906. Its organization was effected by five members of the Periclean Literary Society, who permanently withdrew from that Society for the purpose of organizing and maintaining the Lee. The necessity for a new society was apparent from the congested condition of the existing societies. The founders of the Lee recognized the necessity of better facilities for literary training, and limited the membership of the Lee to collegiate boys.

The Electrical Engineering Society.

In September, 1902, the Board of Directors of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers appointed a committee of local organizations, the object of this committee being to promote the organization of local meetings. The primary purpose of these meetings was stated to be the presentation of papers and discussions of the regular meetings of the Institute, to be supplemented, however, by original papers from local members, or by subjects of local interest.

A local organization was formed in the University during March, 1904, since which time regular meetings have been held.

Any person pursuing a regular course of study in electrical subjects may be enrolled as a student-member of the Institute. This entitles all such students to receive the regular monthly proceedings of the Institute, to attend Institute meetings, and to purchase bound volumes of the Transactions at a reduced price.

The student-members of the Institute in the University recognized the need of an Engineering Society that would promote the literary interests of its members and, at the same time, bring them into closer touch with their life-work.

Accordingly, in October, 1906, such a Society was organized—known as the Electrical Engineering Society. At present the Society has twenty-seven members, and is very progressive. Regular meetings are held in the Engineering Hall on the first and third Tuesdays of each month.

All students, whether members of the Society or not, who are in Electrical subjects are welcome to attend these meetings, take part in the discussions, and present papers.

The Demosthenean Literary Society.

The Demosthenean Literary Society was organized in the spring of 1907 by a band of energetic young men, who saw the need of a new literary society in the University, the enrollment of the other worthy societies being so numerous that members were deprived of active literary work.

The first meetings of this society were held in a class-room in the University building. By March 22, 1907, the society was well organized. At this time the following motto was adopted:

"Tam Marte quam Minerva," "As much by courage as by skill."

The society is growing in numbers, and has the hearty approval of the president. The doors of this society are open to preparatory and collegiate students, who desire to improve their literary talent.

"A Song of the Tulas."

Harken, muse divine,
And touch my lips with poetic fire
From off that sacred altar of thine,
And give me power to draw from my lyre
A wild heart-stirring lay
That in the hearts of men
Shall live forever and a day.

I sing of wild and stirring time,
When the world itself was young;
When in the western clime,
Upon a prehistoric shore,
The foaming waves forever rung.
Here on this cliff,
With its base of blue and crown of red,
Like a prehistoric giant
Sprawling full length on his bed,
Stretched on the other side of yon rift
A fortress, the home of the Tulas.

On a certain summer morn
Stood gazing on the dawn
Its chief, in aspect wild and stern,
As if the thunder of the waves
Making hard his visage
Had also made him brave,
But their oft-repeated thunderous message
Upon his heart had burned.
By his side stood a youth,
The picture of health and strength.
His proud and flashing eye
Told of long lines of noble ancestors
Dating from the dawn of Creation,
When God walked and talked with men.
O'er his shoulders fell a mass of raven hair
That glistened soft and smooth,
His own pride and his father's joy—
For what father who sees his son
In his own likeness growing
Can repress a feeling that God to him
Has done an unequalled kindness?

Thus the elder began
In a voice that smooth and liquid rang,
Lifting, as he spoke,
An arm like the limb of a giant oak:

"Son, thou 'rt of a stock
Almost as ancient as this majestic rock.
Ages ago when men were driven from Eden
Hither they fled for shelter;
Hither to this broad-lying country
Came the three tribes of Tula,
Far to the northward near the ocean
Built by our fathers in the dawn of the ages.

"In a brackish salt-water basin
Lies Coligoya, a tall mound,
The fortified home of the maritime Tulas,
The home of the swift ocean-roving Tulas,
The home of the land-hating, sea-loving Tulas.
Then to the southwestward,
Near the land of the rolling prairies,
Perched on a ridge between the valleys,—
Where waves the corn in the sunshine;
Where glows the gold of the pumpkin;
Where the first frost falls in the autumn;
Where hang the brown beans;
Wherewith in winter they feed the nations—
There above the great fountain of water
Lies the yellow mound of the agricultural Tulas,
The home of the agricultural pot-making Tulas,
The home of the wild free Tulas,
That skim the prairies on their fleet-footed horses.
So much for our friends; now for our enemies.
Far to the northwestward under the Great Bear,
Nestled in the bosom of the mountains,
Lies the valley of the hot waters.
There the nations bathe at the healing springs,
Bathe in the living waters and are made whole.

"There live the Cayas, the enemies of our people,
The breeders of discord among the nations.
Oft have we fought them in the passes
When went we to get heads for our arrows;
Oft have they come in our land,
But as oft have we beaten them.
I have fought them before thy birth,
Even in the lifetime of my father.
Troublers of our people are they,
Causers of sorrow to us,
And yet will be our ruin.

"Beyond these dwell the Casqui;
Them I have never seen,
But my grandfather had been among them.
Great cowards are they, said he,
And men that cringe before the Casqui."
Then, changing his tone from war-like energy

To one of fatherly tenderness,
The chieftain dismisses his son,
Bidding him remember that on the morrow
Began the annual making of salt,
Wherewith they cured the meat
On which they fed during the long winter
And which they took with them
When in the mountains they dug flint—
Flint for their arrow-heads, their spears, and their tomahawks.
Then, when the morrow had come,
The early sun-light saw half the tribe
Transported to the head of a near-by inlet,
Where, while the women went to and fro
Among the hissing cauldrons,
Stalked on the beach the great chieftain,
Planning for future battles,
Planning for future victories,
On recounting the deeds of his fathers.
There at night, when the camp-fires were blazing,
Heard the youth wild, strange stories
Of desperate fights in the passes;
Tales of the valor of his people;
Tales of the wickedness of the nations;
Songs and stories of maidens and their lovers.
So passes the time in useful toil—
In hunting and in fishing;
In trips to the mountains,
Where in the earth's great bosom
Painfully they dug the brown novaculite
And of it made their weapons,
Till at last the cry of the wild geese,
Swift winging their way to the northward,
Gave promise of spring returning.
Then rose the old chief from his camp-fire
To lead his young son to Coligoya,
There to learn from their sages
The knowledge he must have to be a chieftain.
Long and painfully they journeyed;
Journeyed through dense pine forests,
Where the wind moaned and sighed forever;
Journeyed over rough, flinty passes,
Where the sharp stones cut their moccasins,
And called for all their powers of resistance,
Till at last in the dim fog of the morning
Saw they the mound of Coligoya.
Long they gazed on the picture;
Saw from its summit curl
The blue smoke of the camp-fires
And, mingling with the mists of the marshes,
Form the shadowy genii,
The mythical guardians of the nation.
Standing at the foot of the mound,

Awaiting them as they waded in the brackish
 water,
 Were the Coligoyan chief and his daughter;
 Fair as a summer rose was she,
 Robed in purest white;
 Her blue-black hair fell in soft profusion
 O'er shoulders draped with a mantle,
 Clasped with coral set in gold.
 Her graceful neck, that showed
 The delicate bronze of her race,
 Was encircled by a string of pearls,
 Brought by her roving father
 From islands of the sea.
 Softly her eyes rested on the youth
 While their fathers met in stately greeting,
 And then, as her dear cousin,
 She led him up into the home of her fathers.

Then on the morrow rose the old chieftain
 And wended his way homeward,
 Leaving his son at Coligoya;
 Leaving him to learn of war and fighting;
 To learn the ways of their statesmen;
 To learn the secrets of their medicine-men
 And the mystic rite of the magicians.
 There till autumn remained the young man;
 Remained he all the long summer.
 There, when the twilight had fallen,
 When the haze of dust lay on the forest,
 When all the air was heavy with the scents of summer,
 Danced the magicians of the tribe
 Around the blazing pine-knots,
 Lifting their voices in musical cadence
 Till all the pine-woods rang with their fullness
 And the echoes sounded back from the mound
 across the water.

Then, when the gold of the pumpkin
 Shone out from the valley,
 And all the woods were gold and crimson,
 Came from the far South a runner,
 Asking for the young man;
 Asking that he might come to their village
 To see the annual dances,
 To see the joyous dances wherewith
 They celebrated the harvest.
 Then on the morrow rose the youth
 To obey the wish of his people;
 Rose he to take leave of the chieftain,
 Saying, with the grace of a born leader,
 "Mighty friend of my father,

Long have I sat at your table;
Much have I talked with your wise men;
Great regard have I for you and your daughter;
Oft have I wandered with her
Among the sighing pine-trees;
Together have we consulted the sorcerers;
They say our paths lie together,
And truly our hearts are agreed upon it.
Her would I make the daughter of my father,
The daughter of my war-like father,
The pride of my people,
And the mother of future chieftains."
Then rising, the old chieftain,
Drawing his spare form together
Till the smoke-blackened rafters
Were brushed by his head-dress feathers,
Cried in a voice of resignation:
"So it is ever in life.
Scarce had I chosen a wife
And thought my roving o'er
Than she was snatched from me
And I was left to roam again;
Scarce am I settled with my daughter
Than the good of my people,
Which I have ever had in mind,
Demands that I should lose her.
But the young birds cannot remain
Even in the old home nest;
Some day they must fly abroad
And build nests for themselves;
Therefore I give you my blessing
And go again a-roaming.
Strange lands will I see;
To every wind of heaven will spread my sail;
The tribes of the sea will hear our war-cry.
Perhaps at last I shall drift down
Among the 'Happy Isles' and see my wife;
Then I shall be happy in knowing
That I have done well in uniting my people,
And, with an easy conscience,
Shall enter my rest."
Then, with sad thoughts of the old chief
In his wild, reckless roaming,
Southward went the young chief and his bride
Till they came to the mound that
Lies above the valley.
There they tarried till winter,
Till Boreas whitened the trees with snowflakes.
Then homeward they hastened
To the waiting nation and its leader
To cheer them after the long absence.
Much joy to the nation

Brought the fair Coligoyan maiden.
 Oft she cheered them and her husband
 With light-hearted song and story;
 Cheered them with thoughts of a hereafter
 When the old chief went to his Father's,
 Forgetting her own sorrow
 In bringing joy to others.

Long labored the new chief among his people.
 Often he fought their enemies, the Cayas;
 Fought them in winter's white solitudes;
 Fought them in the green woods of summer;
 Fought them till they were weary of slaughter.
 Then, retreating homeward behind the mountains,

He left them to remember the lesson.
 Long governed he the nation;
 Long he taught them to be peaceful;
 Taught them to be kind to their neighbors,
 But terrible when roused to action;
 And at last dying he left them
 Much advice, many warnings;
 Left them hopeful and trustful of the future;
 Left them a prophecy of the nation's greatness;

Told how in after years the sea should go backward;

Coligoya should be left among mountains,
 And where the great gulf of Tula
 Had washed the feet of the hills
 Should be left only a great river;
 Told how, after many moons,
 To the southward should come a great warrior,
 Seeking gold and finding the mighty river;
 Finding only the river, nothing greater;
 Nothing greater than the grave he should lie in.
 Thus passed the greatest Tulan chieftain,
 But his spirit remained with the people;
 Remained till the white men found them;
 Remained till the Spaniards came from the sunrise,

And, with the joy a soldier feels
 In meeting the steel of a worthy foeman,
 Proclaimed him the bravest of the red men.
 Ages have succeeded ages,
 Warriors have risen and warriors have fallen,
 But the spirit of the nameless chieftain
 Still broods over the valley,
 And, in the hearts of a new nation,
 Still fosters peace and leniency.

J. C. PARSONS.

It was a still winter night,
While on my bed, so soft and quiet,
Peace and slumber ruled supreme.
But for a shadow of a dream.

Not a token on my wall
Told me of her frozen call;
Bit by bit her cold white froth
Came as crystals to the earth.

All night long her icy flakes
Came without the sound that wakes
Just beside my silent berth
Gently covering the earth.

Vos plaudite,
The play is done,
And thankfully, one by one,
Are stol'n away the actors,
Glad if aught 's been done
For our Alma Mater, great 'Varsity;
Glad of even meanest place
In her service, our great mistress;
Glad when she turns her face,
Smile-wreathed, upon us.

Some notes in our harmony may have jarred,
Our songs by discords may be marred,
But our purpose fails not from a rhyme's false jingle;
'T is always steadfast, always single,
That in this book the students may find,
Each for himself, remembrance fond
Of pleasures and of sorrows gone
In days that fled with nimble feet,
'Mid bright success and dark defeat.

There was but one Sam Jones

Doubtless it is if his place will ever be filled. What man ever possessed so many characteristics in his nature? Not one of them was responsible for his success. They all contributed to the acknowledged result. His unmatched humor and his wonderful judgment of human nature endeared him to all. He feared nothing, not even human criticism. He strove to make RIGHT his guiding star, and man's censure was as welcome as man's praise, for he KNEW he was right. He convinced the world that he was a man of honest and earnest purposes. His humor was all-abounding and bubbled in its mellow force to flavor his utterances; and this aroused the emotions. Through his wonderful influence he possessed a mastery over audiences that no man of his time or before possessed.

WHY SAM JONES APPEALED TO THE MASSES

He hated the sin, but he helped the sinner.
 He thought an ounce of mirth was worth a pound of sighs in any market place.
 He was himself a living exemplar of the truths he preached. From a member of the "Down-and-Out Club" he raised himself to a profit of light.
 He never forgot that Christianity was a religion of joy and laughter, not one of tears and sorrow; a living help for this earth, now and here, and not a bundle of dried and moldy dogmas.
 With all his firmness and steadfastness of purpose and conviction he was gentle, tender and kind in the truest sense.

FORT SMITH, the rapidly growing wholesale and manufacturing center of the progressive southwest, offers many opportunities to good men who thoroughly master a course of instruction at our Commercial College. Dolceola

A Miniature Grand Piano

Played with keys like a piano and having similar action.

The Dolceola, with its four full octaves, embodies the exquisite tone value of two guitars and two mandolins. Its action, while similar to that of a piano, is quicker and more simple, permitting effects impossible with the larger instrument. Any class of music can be played. Music lovers are delighted with it. You must have one

The DOLCEOLA is the only musical instrument ever invented that has been demanded and sold in nearly every country upon the globe, the first year it was on the market.

It is endorsed by leading musicians everywhere, as well as by the nobility of Europe.

FROM A MUSICAL AUTHORITY OF NEW YORK:—"I consider it an instrument of great merit. It will be of great assistance in preparing beginners for the piano."—Albert Gerard-Thiers.

Chas. K. Harris, author of "After the Ball," says "My children are learning it without an instructor."

The Princess of Isenberg, Dramstadt, Germany, says: "I have received the Dolceola, and am delighted with it."
